

Lightning Literature
& Composition
Grade 6
Teacher's Guide

by Elizabeth Kamath

For Toby and Simon

Cover illustration by Shutterstock “Ellerslie”

Except for photos listed below, graphics have been provided by Shutterstock, New York, NY

Black and white photos taken from “agolodzghetto.com” from the ghetto in Lodz, Poland

The source for the poems: www.public-domain-poetry.com

Edited by Hewitt Staff

Mailing address. P.O. Box 28010, Spokane, WA 99228

Phone (360) 835-8708; (800) 348-1750

E-mail info@hewitthomeschooling.com

Website. www.hewitthomeschooling.com

©2020 by Elizabeth Kamath. All rights reserved. Except as noted on the page, no part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, without the prior written permission of Hewitt Research Foundation

Published August 2020

Printed in the United States of America

26 25 24 23 22 21 20 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

ISBN 10: 1-57896-292-7

ISBN 13: 978-1-57896-292-1

Table of Contents

How to Use This Teacher’s Guide	1
Week 1: The Wonderful Wizard of Oz by L. Frank Baum	7
Week 2: The Wonderful Wizard of Oz by L. Frank Baum	15
Week 3: The Wonderful Wizard of Oz by L. Frank Baum	21
Week 4: The Wonderful Wizard of Oz by L. Frank Baum	29
Week 5: The View from Saturday by E. L. Konigsburg	35
Week 6: The View from Saturday by E. L. Konigsburg	41
Week 7: The View from Saturday by E. L. Konigsburg	47
Week 8: Poetry Unit 1—Introduction to Poetry	55
Week 9: The Wednesday Wars by Gary Schmidt	63
Week 10: The Wednesday Wars by Gary Schmidt	71
Week 11: The Wednesday Wars by Gary Schmidt	79
Week 12: The Wednesday Wars by Gary Schmidt	87
Week 13: Pax by Sara Pennypacker	93
Week 14: Pax by Sara Pennypacker	99
Week 15: Pax by Sara Pennypacker	103
Week 16: Pax by Sara Pennypacker	107
Week 17: Pax by Sara Pennypacker	113
Week 18: Poetry Unit 2—Sound in Poetry	119
Week 19: A Long Walk to Water by Linda Sue Park	125
Week 20: A Long Walk to Water by Linda Sue Park	133
Week 21: Yellow Star by Jennifer Roy	139
Week 22: Yellow Star by Jennifer Roy	147
Week 23: Yellow Star by Jennifer Roy	155
Week 24: Yellow Star by Jennifer Roy	163
Week 25: Poetry Unit 3—Figures of Speech, Imagery, Speaker	169
Week 26: Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry by Mildred D. Taylor	175
Week 27: Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry by Mildred D. Taylor	181
Week 28: Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry by Mildred D. Taylor	187
Week 29: Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry by Mildred D. Taylor	193
Week 30: Poetry Unit 4—Our Final Look at Poetry	199
Week 31: The Wind in the Willows by Kenneth Grahame	207
Week 32: The Wind in the Willows by Kenneth Grahame	213
Week 33: The Wind in the Willows by Kenneth Grahame	219
Week 34: The Wind in the Willows by Kenneth Grahame	225
Week 35: The Wind in the Willows by Kenneth Grahame	231
Week 36: The Wind in the Willows by Kenneth Grahame	237
Appendices	245

Welcome to the Grade 6 Lightning Literature program! With this series I hope to instill a love of great literature in students, to help them expand their ability to read intelligently and deeply, to improve their communication abilities, and to prepare them for more advanced language arts concepts. The three key components to this series are literature, grammar and mechanics, and composition.

Even if you've completed previous Lightning Literature programs, I recommend you read this introduction. Each year brings new changes and challenges.

If you have students who struggle in language arts for any reason, please feel free to adjust my instructions here to meet their needs. For example, you may choose to have your students dictate the answers to comprehension questions or grammar exercises rather than writing them. Or you can skip some compositions if you feel the number I have here would overwhelm your students. While I like students to be challenged, I think it's important not to overwhelm them and turn reading and writing into a painful task.

Literature

Reading Selections

This is the last year of the elementary series of Lightning Literature. Students are more capable of understanding greater depth and nuance in story and character. Accordingly, I've chosen books that address more serious subjects such as war, bigotry, and the Holocaust. A Long Walk to Water takes a (mostly) straight-forward factual approach, Yellow Star is a true story written in a poetic manner, Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry is realistic fiction, and Pax is a bit more fantastical fiction but none the less affecting for that choice.

There's always room for pleasantness, and I have book-ended the year with two of the sunniest children's classics: The Wonderful Wizard of Oz and The Wind in the Willows. But even when reading the more difficult material, I encourage you to emphasize to students the points of light. In the midst of war, of deprivation, of oppression, there are still good people, moments of hope, and even triumphs. Encourage students to look for these in the more difficult readings.

As always, I reviewed far more books than I included here, and I strove to include only quality literature while attempting to balance male and female perspectives and a variety of cultural points of view. Of course our world is rich in cultures, and I cannot possibly represent them all here. I have tried, over the entirety of the Lightning Literature curriculum, to bring a variety of voices to students.

I also strove for a variety of genres. This year I've managed two works of nonfiction (one is unusual in that it is written as poetry), two works of historical fiction (it pains me to admit a book set in the 1960s—when I was born—does count as historical fiction), two charming fantasies, and three realistic novels (including the two historical ones). The View from Saturday and Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry won the Newbery Medal, and The Wednesday Wars is a Newbery Honor Book. Of course, not every student will love every book, and for that I'm truly sorry. But my hope is people will find new loves as well.

Daily Reading

Four days each week, I assign a certain number of chapters or pages until the book is completed. As always, you can read aloud to your students or students can read on their own. You can also do a combination—perhaps reading some books to your students while assigning others as read-alone. Or having the students read the day’s chapters alone first, then reading through the book together while discussing the comprehension questions. Some students will be reading at a level beyond these books, but you will find that reading these books with the questions and lessons that go along with them improves your students’ literary skills and comprehension.

This year, for the first time, I have two specific recommendations about reading aloud if you are intending to read aloud some but not all of the books. Roll of Thunder, Hear My Cry contains racial epithets that are fitting to the time, place, and personalities of the characters who utter them. Without them, the book would have been less realistic. Nevertheless, it makes for an uncomfortable read-aloud experience. I do strongly encourage teachers to talk about these epithets with students to be sure they understand their offensive, hateful nature. On the other hand, The Wind in the Willows is one of the most stylistically interesting children’s books ever written, and many people find it a great pleasure to read aloud.

There are four weeks devoted to poems, spread throughout the year. I could not find a poetry book I wanted to use for this year, so instead I’ve included the poems in the Student Workbook (just as I did for Grade 5). As with the books, you can choose how you want to approach reading these.

Comprehension Questions

Each day of reading includes comprehension questions for the chapters or poems read that day. The questions are in the Student Workbook, the answers in the Teacher’s Guide. (Note that my answers are not always complete sentences. I do not require students to always answer in complete sentences when having an oral discussion, as we don’t always talk that way.)

Questions are of various types. Some questions are literal—the answers can be found directly in the reading. Some questions are inferential. These require the student to understand something not directly stated in the text. Another type of question is evaluative. Here students are asked to provide either a judgment about something that happened in the story (“Do you think this character did the right thing?”) or to reflect on some aspect of the story in their own lives (“Have you ever felt the way this character is feeling here?”). Predictive questions ask the student to guess what will happen next in the story. Some questions require literary analysis (“What did we learn about the character from what they just did here?”).

I always prefer comprehension questions as a tool to improve reading comprehension rather than a test of it. Students are still learning to attend fully to books, and these questions can help them learn to focus on their reading in a more mature manner. If a student is stressed because they are afraid they will answer the questions wrong, their focus and love of reading will decrease rather than increase.

Book Discussion

At the end of each book or week of poems, I provide help for a discussion of the reading. This discussion can be between just a teacher and one student or it can be a larger group.

The Student Workbook includes a list of discussion questions for the student to think about (parents or teachers may want to look at these too). Some of these questions address emotional, ethical, moral, and similar considerations of the reading. They help the student bring the ideas of the reading into their own life. Other questions are more purely literary—helping students to better see such things as character motivation, how an author creates tone, and how an author develops a theme.

The Teacher's Guide has notes on various aspects of each book—story, characters, setting, etc. Sometimes the information is general (for example, the basic story line). Other times I focus on aspects that underscore the theme.

Your students may well have other ideas about the story, characters, etc. than what I have here, and that's fine. Literature isn't math—I can't give you a series of black and white answers. This is both exciting and (to some) frustrating. The bottom line for any assertion about a book is, can the student support what they say with the book? If a student says a character is friendly, they have to show something in the book that tells us that.

Literature is dynamic. Different people will see different things depending on their outlook, experience, personality, etc. Your students will see some unexpected things in some of these books—and what they see may tell you more about them than about the books. It's important to honor personal responses to books (authors want personal responses from their readers), but it's also important for students to learn how to analyze a story beyond their own feelings. These discussions are part of that process.

The first aspect I cover for every story is Theme. Although this is the most abstract aspect, it's what these discussions are aiming for—understanding of theme, or the author's message. The other aspects (story, characters, setting) will often underscore the theme, so it's useful for you to know it first. After theme, the Teacher's Guide provides details in the following areas: Story, Character, Setting, External Details, Internal Details, and Conflict. I sometimes include Symbolism, but not all books have symbolism.

.....

Story is the main plotline. I provide a brief summary for each book.

.....

Character includes a description of the main character(s) (physical and personality).

.....

Setting is where and when the story happens.

.....

External details are any pertinent details of the story that aren't captured in any of the other summaries, for example, minor characters in the story. This may also include cause-effect, order of events, or an unusual feature about a book such as its structure or style.

Theme

Story

Character/s

Setting

External
Details

Internal details are emotions and other feelings the characters experience in addition to their central personality, for example, a character might normally be happy but experience sadness in response to an event in the book.

Internal
Details

.....
Conflict includes what the character wants, what keeps the character from getting it, and what the character does to overcome the obstacle.

Conflict

.....
Symbolism is the use of one thing to represent something else. Usually an author uses something concrete (an animal, a piece of clothing, music, etc.) to represent something abstract (loyalty, companionship, happiness, etc.). Not all books contain symbolism.

Symbolism

Reading Journal

After the book discussion, turn to the appropriate pages in the Student Workbook (immediately following the discussion questions). Students will write their favorite sentence from the book and their opinion of the book. This part is optional.

Grammar and Mechanics

I have grouped grammar, punctuation, capitalization, parts of speech, sentence diagramming, poetry instruction, and even composition and literary concepts under the umbrella term “grammar and mechanics.” The Student Workbook contains lessons and sometimes assignments (with instructions and examples). Always read the instructions with your students, and be sure they understand them before having them complete the page. The Teacher’s Guide contains answers to the workbook pages.

I recommend that students take a notebook (any type will do) and make notes throughout the year about grammar they struggle with. For example, if they have trouble with certain irregular plurals they would record them in their notebook and study them regularly. While I can present the range of grammar skills expected of students each year, I cannot know where your students excel and where they struggle. If they haven’t already, Grade 6 is an excellent time for students to start taking a more active part in their learning. I make suggestions in the Student Workbook about particular things students might wish to put in their notebook, but they shouldn’t limit themselves to my suggestions.

Grammar and mechanics are reviewed frequently in the Student Workbook. Sometimes multiple concepts are addressed in one review worksheet. As with all aspects of learning, students vary widely in how easily these concepts will stick. Remember that your primary goal is for your students to love language arts. Don’t risk impeding that to ensure an understanding of commas or adverbs by the end of the year. Often something will click easily with a student a year later that they couldn’t understand when it was first introduced.

Correspondingly, unless you have a student who wants grades, I recommend avoiding letter or percentage grades on the workbook pages (or any aspect of this course). Do show your student what they missed on the workbook questions, and review the missed questions together so they understand the problem. But use them as tools to reinforce the concepts and check your students’ understanding rather than a judgment on their performance.

If your student is not getting a concept, rather than forcing them to do the workbook pages on their own, work on them together as a teaching tool. Some lessons assume exposure to the subject. If your student used the previous Lightning Literature courses, they will have had this exposure. They may have also learned the topic from another language arts course. But if your student never covered the topic, some lessons may be too cursory for them. In that case—or if your student struggled previously with this concept—feel free to work closely with them to provide a more thorough understanding.

A Note About Sentence Diagramming

Once sentence diagramming was always taught in schools; now it is rare. While I don't believe the old ways are always better, in this case I think students have lost something. While word choice, paragraph formation, and logical organization are vital to good writing (as are many other skills), the central unit of written language is the sentence.

Sentence diagramming is not merely drawing lines and repositioning words. It helps teach students the function of words in a sentence. For example, although we give adjectives, articles, and possessive pronouns different names, they are often diagrammed in the same manner because they often function in the same manner—to modify a noun. The reverse is also true—the same word may function as different parts of speech depending on its placement in a sentence. I can illustrate this succinctly with a bit of silliness: Don't allow your horse to horse around on the horse track.

Diagramming can be particularly helpful to students who are visual learners or those who enjoy puzzles. Try the diagramming this year—you might be surprised at how your student does. But if they struggle with it excessively and it continues to frustrate rather than illuminate, feel free to drop those questions. My focus with diagramming is not just to learn diagramming. Rather, I find it can be a useful tool to help students better understand sentence formation and word functions. If it is not helping your student do that, it's not worth the trouble.

Composition

The composition portion of this course should, as with all aspects, be tailored to your students' levels. The best way to do this is usually paper length or number. While an average student in language arts can be expected to write a one- to two-page paper for most assignments, if this will overly stress your student, feel free to require less. You could also assign longer papers for those types of assignments your student prefers. The same student who can barely produce three paragraphs of a research paper might happily hand you a 30-page short story (after which you would be perfectly within your rights to assign not just a minimum but a maximum paper length).

You should also feel free to simply drop some compositions. You may wish to preview the compositions for the year and choose some ahead of time to drop. You might also want to work with your student(s) to come to a joint decision about this. I have always preferred to err on the side of giving more compositions so teachers would have more to choose from.

The composition assignments cover a variety of writing aspects—creative writing, essays of all sorts (persuasive, explanatory, opinion, etc.), research papers, poems, etc. Again, you want to make this an enjoyable experience for your students while also starting to push them towards quality work. Work closely with them on the compositions (unless they specifically ask you not to). At the end, stress what they did well in the composition, then discuss together how it might be improved.

COMPOSITION BOOK: The student will need lined composition pages. We have provided masters for 3/8-inch ruled lines in the back of this Teacher's Guide, which you can copy and collect in a three-ring binder. You may wish to purchase a composition book. If you are able to find a choice of composition books, your students can pick from the selection, making the book more personal. A couple of other options are ordering online and finding a site that has lined paper of various ruled lines free to print.

Tailoring This Course to Your Needs

These three things—literature, grammar and mechanics, and composition—are the core of this class. Regardless of your students’ abilities or interests, I urge you to complete, at least in some fashion, all of these.

The following portions are optional. Although I believe all are valuable, and I have reasons for including them, they are not central to the program. Depending on your students’ existing skills, strengths, interests, and your time constraints, you may skip any or all of them. You could also do some on occasional weeks.

READING RESPONSES: These are the sections (favorite sentence; “What I thought of this book”) after the reading discussion sections in the Student Workbook.

EXTENDING THE LESSON: At the end of each week, I give ideas for extra projects to extend the lesson. These ideas are meant for the more advanced student or for when any student is particularly excited by the reading or by any of the extension ideas. Although these appear at the end of each week, you don’t have to wait until the end of the week to do extra projects. Some of these extra projects relate to language arts while others apply to other subjects (history, science, art, etc.).

Preparing for the Week

Before the week begins, read the appropriate parts of the book if you are unfamiliar with the book. If it is a book discussion week, read the book summary in the Teacher’s Guide and the discussion questions in the Student Workbook. Mark which optional projects you think would most interest your student or that you think would most reinforce the learning.

Gather any materials you need. The basics for this course rarely require extra materials, but if you plan on doing the lesson extensions you will likely need more. If you plan to read other books by the same author, preview the books. (Although I always include reading more books by the author as an extra project, I have not read all books by all these authors. If you have concerns about your student reading certain types of books, you will need to preview these books.)

Free Days

Once each week I give a free day. You can take a day off language arts, use the day to complete any work from earlier, add extra projects—whatever you want. This can vary from week to week.

Final Thoughts

I hope you enjoy this program. I have tried hard to choose interesting readings, assign a variety of papers, and make grammar more fun and accessible. Please feel free to trim or augment this course as you wish, with some guidance from what I’ve written here. I encourage you to keep developing (or maintaining) a love of reading and writing in your students foremost in your thoughts as you begin this year.